

Sessions at ICMS 2017 (Kalamazoo, 11 – 14 May 17)

Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo, MI, May 11–14, 2017

H-ArtHist Redaktion

2 Sessions at the 52nd International Congress on Medieval Studies, May 11-14, 2017,
Kalamazoo, MI

[\[1\]](#) The Western Iberian Kingdoms after 1143

[\[2\]](#) Body and Soul in Medieval Visual Culture

---

[\[1\]](#)

From: ALICIA MIGUÉLEZ CAVERO <amiguel@fcsh.unl.pt>

Date: Jul 18, 2016

Subject: The Western Iberian Kingdoms after 1143

Kalamazoo, Western Michigan University

Deadline: Sep 5, 2016

The Western Iberian Kingdoms after 1143

Organizers: Maria Dolores Teijeira (Instituto de Estudios Medievales, Universidad de León) and Alicia

Miguelé (Instituto de Estudos Medievais, Universidade Nova de Lisboa)

The year 1143 was decisive for the birth of what is today considered the oldest nation-state of the Western world: Portugal. On October 5, 1143 King Alfonso VII of León and Castile and his cousin Afonso Henriques signed the so-called Treaty of Zamora - under the auspices of the papal envoy Cardinal Guido de Vico - meant the recognition of the title of King for Afonso Henriques by Alfonso VII of León. Three months later, on December 13, the Portuguese King addressed the letter Clavis Regni to Rome asking to become vassal of the pope, a process that would only finish in 1179, when Pope Alexander III officially recognised Afonso Henriques as the first King of Portugal through the bull Manifestis Probatum.

The new-born kingdom would keep its independence during the entire medieval period, despite the several attempts of its neighbouring territories to reincorporate it. The establishment of territorial borders and political frontiers between Portugal and the surrounding Western Iberian territories –which politically evolved until becoming the united kingdom of León and Castile in 1230- did obviously not imply the isolation of these territories, which shared similar needs and aims, a common enemy in the south and the same religious and cultural background. Rather, Portugal, Galicia, León and Castile show an intense cluster of political, economical, social and cultural exchanges and relationships which might led to reconsider the concepts of frontiers and borders in medieval times, as well as to advance knowledge in the role played by these territories in both the Iberian and European contexts during the Middle Ages.

The Instituto de Estudios Medievales of the University of León and the Instituto de Estudos Medievais of the Nova University in Lisbon organize two interdisciplinary sessions for scholars from several disciplines, those including History, Art History, Archaeology and Literature. These panels invite 15 minute papers that focus on one the following issues:

- Diplomatic relations: Alliances, Treaties, Royal marriages and other political links.
- The circulation of people, models and ideas
- War, Reconquest and Crusade: differences and similarities on the Reconquest between both kingdoms. Conflict and war between them
- Exchanges of artists and models among the different territories. Similarities and differences on artistic patronage.
- Literary production and courtly life

The deadline for paper proposals is September 5, 2016. Please send the abstract of your proposed paper (up to 300 words) and your CV to Alicia Miguélez (amiguel@fcsh.unl.pt).

More info at:

<https://wmich.edu/sites/default/files/attachments/u434/2016/medieval-call-for-papers-2017.pdf>

---

[2]

From: Judith Soria <judith.soria@yahoo.fr>

Date: Jul 18, 2016

Subject: Body and Soul in Medieval Visual Culture

Kalamazoo, MI, May 11 - 14, 2017

Deadline: Sep 15, 2016

Body and Soul in Medieval Visual Culture

Organizers: Judith Soria (CNRS « Orient et Méditerranée ») and Jennifer Lyons (Ithaca College)

Medieval theologians and artists wrestled with the dual "natures" of the human form: the soul, whose indefinite substance is connected with ideas of the animate, and the body, visible and mortal. Monastic life (supposed to be essentially spiritual) was organized, according to Byzantine typika and Western monastic rules, as a way to control the passions and to master the body by regulating the most pragmatic aspects of daily life so that monks could focus on tending the soul through prayer. Medieval artists responded to this tension between the spiritual and the corporeal in various ways in the visual arts of the Greek East and the Latin West. In Genesis cycles, for example, the animation of Adam and Eve expressed this duality without picturing the soul itself, while in representations of the Dormition of the Virgin, the soul of the Mother of God was typically presented in the form of an infant or small, pale body. This session seeks papers that explore the range of ways in which medieval artists responded to the anthropological duality of body and soul in the visual arts of the Byzantine and Western medieval worlds.

Please send an abstract of the proposed paper, (300 words), a cv with current contact information, and a completed Participant Information Form (available at <https://wmich.edu/medievalcongress/submissions>) to Judith Soria (judith.soria@yahoo.fr) and Jennifer Lyons (jenniferlyo@gmail.com) by September 15, 2016.

Abstracts not accepted for the session will be forwarded to the Congress administrators for considerations in general sessions.

Reference:

CFP: Sessions at ICMS 2017 (Kalamazoo, 11 - 14 May 17). In: ArtHist.net, Jul 18, 2016 (accessed Jan 3, 2026), <<https://arthist.net/archive/13534>>.