

Modern Bodies: Dress, Nation, Empire, and Gender (Beirut, 15 Mar 18)

Lebanese American University Beirut, Mar 15, 2018

Yasmine Nachabe Taan

Modern Bodies: Dress, Nation, Empire, and Gender in the Modern Middle East

Convened by Reina Lewis, London College of Fashion, UAL, and Yasmine Taan, Lebanese American university, LAU.

Conference will be held at LAU, Irwin Auditorium, Beirut campus.

Working from a position of multiple modernities, multiple imperialisms, and in recognition of the diversity of regional experiences of postcoloniality, this conference examines the role of the dressed, and undressed, body in the formation, staging, and interrogation of the modern Middle East. Ranging from the role of the displayed elite body in campaigns for gender and social emancipation in Ottoman imperial cultures through to accounts of dress in the lives of early nationalist women and men, papers also investigate the use of legal frameworks by those who seek to control or resist the movement of women's bodies. Combining approaches from cultural, social, and economic history with the history of art and photography and visual culture, the conference evaluates the role of material culture, representation, and curation in the telling of women's and gender history and histories of sexuality. Bringing forward new primary material and re-investigating extant sources from new perspectives, the Modern Bodies provides an opportunity to reflect on the role of the archive, collecting, and display in the imaging of the Middle East.

With a periodisation focused on the late nineteenth to mid twentieth century, the conference provides a valuable lens through which to evaluate the critical role of the dressed gendered body in contemporary struggles over nation, modernity, and postmodernity.
