

Presidential Academic Fellowships, University of Manchester

University of Manchester

Application deadline: Apr 3, 2018

www.brightest-minds.manchester.ac.uk/areas-of-opportunity/humanities/

Anthony Gerbino

The University of Manchester Presidential Academic Fellowship: Non-Western or Global Art History

Creative, ambitious and keen to develop transformative research, you will relish this excellent opportunity to drive your academic career to a higher level. As an impressive early career academic, you'll recognise that securing a Presidential Academic Fellowship at the University of Manchester will empower you to unlock your potential. In addition to a good salary for the duration of your Fellowship, you'll receive several thousand pounds per annum for research support costs and access to key technology platforms. Your time during this award will be initially dedicated to research, with no or minimal teaching in the first year, and minimal teaching in the second year. Thereafter teaching would increase with each subsequent year of the fellowship. You can look forward to mentoring and assistance in winning external funding and awards.

As a Presidential Academic Fellow, you will join one of the UK's foremost art history departments. Strongly interdisciplinary, we have close ties to the Institute for Cultural Practices, to other disciplines and research centres across the University, and to a wide range of museums, galleries and venues across the city's award-winning cultural sector. With a specialism in any area of non-Western or global art history, you'll contribute new areas of expertise to the study of the arts and cultural heritage. Along the way, we'll encourage you to develop collaborative links with our partners in Manchester's creative sector, including the University's own thriving cultural assets.

<https://www.jobs.manchester.ac.uk/brightestminds/displayjob.aspx?jobid=14700>

The University of Manchester Presidential Academic Fellowship: Interdisciplinary Arts

Creative, ambitious and keen to develop transformative research, you will relish this excellent opportunity to drive your academic career to a higher level. As an impressive early career academic, you'll recognise that securing a Presidential Academic Fellowship at the University of Manchester will empower you to unlock your potential. In addition to a good salary for the duration of your Fellowship, you'll receive several thousand pounds per annum for research support costs and access to key technology platforms. Your time during this award will be initially dedicated to research, with no or minimal teaching in the first year, and minimal teaching in the second year.

Thereafter teaching would increase with each subsequent year of the fellowship. You can look forward to mentoring and assistance in winning external funding and awards.

As a Presidential Academic Fellow, you will bring interdisciplinary expertise in the arts, with research interests focusing on one or more of art history/visual studies, music, live arts and performance. Carrying out research that seeks actively to engage with the University's cultural partners in the city and beyond, your specialisms may include the creative and/or cultural industries; cultural policy studies; professional practice; community arts, education and development; digital technologies; global cultures; and/or performance studies. You'll contribute to an ambitious and timely expansion of scholarship at Manchester relating to the creative economy. In particular, you will be part of an exciting and growing programme of knowledge exchange, public engagement and professional development opportunities.

<https://www.jobs.manchester.ac.uk/brightestminds/displayjob.aspx?jobid=14697>

Presidential Academic Fellowships in humanities and social sciences offer a salary of £39,992–£49,149, plus £3,500 per annum for research support costs and access to key technology platforms. Following a four-year probationary period, and subject to satisfactory performance, you will then transfer to an appropriate academic contract.

Presidential Academic Fellows will do no teaching or minimal teaching in the first year and minimal teaching in the second year. Thereafter teaching would increase with each subsequent year of the fellowship.

To join us, you will need a relevant PhD or equivalent qualification. You'll bring to the role a sustained record of publication output. Crucially, you will demonstrate the ability to develop a coherent world-leading research programme, with new concepts and ideas to extend intellectual understanding. You have what it takes to organise resources and deliver results to deadlines. Your excellent communication and interpersonal skills also equip you to build a team, and to inspire and engage students. The determination to win your own funding will be key to your success.

The University of Manchester is committed to building a culturally diverse institution where all staff and students can flourish and feel valued for their contribution and individuality. Our policies and practices are designed to encourage talented people, whatever their background, to work and study here. All appointments are made on merit.

To discover more please visit www.brightest-minds.manchester.ac.uk where you can view contact details and further particulars, and apply online.

Enquiries about the vacancy, shortlisting and interviews:

Name: Anthony Gerbino

Email: anthony.gerbino@manchester.ac.uk

Reference:

JOB: Presidential Academic Fellowships, University of Manchester. In: ArtHist.net, Feb 11, 2018 (accessed Jul 5, 2025), <<https://arthist.net/archive/17320>>.