SURREALISM IN BRITAIN, 1925-1955

The Hepworth Wakefield, Saturday 6 October 2018, 10am – 4pm

£15 / £10 Members / £7.50 Students

Convened over the final weekend of the exhibition Lee Miller and Surrealism in Britain at The Hepworth Wakefield (22 June – 7 October 2018) this one-day international symposium aims to rethink Surrealism in Britain through an expanded lens. The deliberately broad time-frame allows for exploration of Surrealism's presence in Britain before its supposed arrival in 1936 and in the post-war era.

Bridging fine art, fashion and journalism with an eye for the extraordinary, Lee Miller's photography provides a useful starting point for a renewed consideration of a broad range of Surrealist practices as they unfolded in Britain between the 1920s and 1950s.

Questioning familiar narratives, the symposium aims to reconstruct intricate networks of artists and writers – friends, lovers and rivals – through which Surrealist ideas circulated and mutated during a turbulent historical period.

The event includes a keynote lecture by Dr Patricia Allmer (Edinburgh University).

Organised by Dr Rachel Stratton (Courtauld Institute of Art) and Dr Hilary Floe (The Hepworth Wakefield).
