[1] Beyond City Walls: Art, Architecture, and the Rural in Renaissance/Early Modern Europe

From: Caroline Murphy, cemurphy@mit.edu
Date: 8 May 2019

In North American art and architectural historiography, the towering position of an idealist, urban Renaissance in narratives of Western modernity has led to a categorical marginalization of objects and histories outside city walls. Challenging this urban bias, the panel asks how visual and material cultures of Renaissance/early modern Europe might be examined from an extramural, rural perspective. Papers may take a material, labour, environmental, or intellectual approach to the topic, and address any of the following, or related, questions: How can a focus on transformations of natural resources into artistic and building supplies enhance our understanding of the processes and agents involved in art and architectural production? In what ways did artists and architects engage in rural environments, either through acts of visual representation or territorial design? How, moreover, did they theorize the natural landscape beyond the city, and its relationship to the urban realm? Alternatively, can works produced in peripheral, so-called “provincial” settings question dominant narratives about artistic and architectural thought and practice in the Renaissance?

Chair / Présidente:
Caroline Murphy, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, cemurphy@mit.edu

Please submit your paper proposal directly to the session chair / Les propositions de communications doivent être envoyées directement à la présidente de séance.

Curatorial Activism

From: Andrea Terry, aterry@lakeheadu.ca
Date: 8 May 2019

In her recent book Curatorial Activism, Maura Reilly calls for cultural workers to commit themselves to “leveling hierarchies, challenging assumptions, countering erasure, promoting the margins over the center, the minority over the majority, inspiring intelligent debate, disseminating new knowledge, and encouraging strategies of resistance.” Taking up Reilly’s call, as well as drawing on the 2018 special theme issue of RACAR, “What is Critical Curating,” edited by Marie Fraser and Alice Ming Wai Jim, this session asks participants to define and/or describe their curatorial activism. What curatorial calls for change can be/have been used to challenge and/or change institutionalized hierarchical structures? What accomplishments have been realized by those working in or independently from art galleries and museums? How can artists, curators, researchers, and educators come together to make change happen? This panel encourages applications from artists, curators, educators, researchers and the like, to consider these issues from a variety of perspectives.

Interconnections in the Long Nineteenth Century

From: Alison McQueen, ajmcq@mcmaster.ca
Date: 10 May 2019

This panel invites papers that examine the significant roles assigned to visual culture in understanding global connections in the long nineteenth century (c.1789-1914). Connections between places and power relations raise important questions, and transnational approaches offer a means of disrupting histories, including those centred on national identities. Papers may consider the following questions: What roles did visual culture play in communicating, reinforcing, enacting, complicating and/or disrupting imperial power structures and settler-colonial narratives? What issues of agency, or factors inhibiting agency, faced imperial subjects and/or citizens as creators, patrons or spectators? How did they traverse or negotiate between geopolitical realms, such as the métropole, provinces or colonies? How can the social history of art raise new questions about interconnections in the long nineteenth century? How does a transnational approach enrich and expand current conceptions of nineteenth-century art and reconceptualise its parameters? What does it promise and are there drawbacks?

[4] Photography and Empathy Revisited

From: Linda Steer, lsteer@brocku.ca
Date: 10 May 2019

Photography has a long and complicated history with questions of empathy. In the context of humanitarian photography Kimberly Juanita Brown argues “the viewer supposes that the evidentiary value of the documentary photograph allows him or her to feel what the subject in the photo feels, this is a fallacy of liberal intention.” Drawing on the ethics of care, philosopher Lori Gruen proposes an alternative in “entangled empathy” that relies on self-awareness as well as awareness of the other. To what extent might these insights help us to reframe photographic relations or situations through empathy? Where does empathy falter? The time is right to revisit the subject we first brought to UAAC five years ago. We welcome papers that critique or interrogate the relationship between empathy and photography. We are also interested in papers that develop new theoretical examinations of empathy and its relation to affect via photography.

Chairs / Présidentes:
Sarah Parsons, York University, sparsons@yorku.ca
Linda Steer, Brock University, lsteer@brocku.ca

Please send your proposal to both chairs and include:
- the completed call for papers form found on the UAAC conference website
- a proposal (300 words maximum)
- a brief biography (150 words maximum)

Deadline: 31 May 2019

For more information, see the UAAC conference site: https://uaac-aauc.com/conference/

Non-members may submit a proposal, but, if selected, must join UAAC by September 15, 2019.
