

new website for international feminist art journal n.paradoxa

Katy Deepwell

n.paradoxa: international feminist art journal announces its new dynamic website:
<http://www.ktpress.co.uk>

The new website offers an exciting portal/platform for research on feminism and contemporary art in the last 40 years as well as presenting the journal's history over the last 14 years. Book reviews and editorials are now available online.

In its 14 year history, the journal has published the work of over 300 writers from more than 50 countries around the world.

New search facilities enable users to search 1,000 bibliographic entries to books, anthologies, exhibition catalogues, websites and magazines (including special issues) on feminist art. Searches are available by title, date, country, author.

Search facilities are also available for the articles published in n.paradoxa by title, author and country.

The journal had two forms up until Sept 2010, one in print, the other online. These had separate ISSNs and different contents.

With the release of electronic PDFs of the print journal articles, n.paradoxa's online issues published between 1996-2010 are now archived on this site and form part of the new search facility.

The print journal continues with volume 29 (Jan 2012) Trans-Asia, and volume 30 (July 2012) Feminist Aesthetics.

New electronic subscriptions to individuals and libraries are now available.

Reference:

WWW: new website for international feminist art journal n.paradoxa. In: ArtHist.net, Nov 17, 2011
(accessed Jul 19, 2025), <<https://arthist.net/archive/2177>>.