Entangled Histories of Art and Migration. Theories, Sites and Research Methods
ed. by Cathrine Bublatzky, Burcu Dogramaci, Kerstin Pinther, Mona Schieren

The DFG network "Entangled Histories of Art and Migration: Forms, Visibilities, Agents" invites contributions for its upcoming publication, dedicated to the interwoven histories of migration, art and globalisation as a significant phenomenon of social and political transformation in the 20th and 21st centuries. From a decisively art and cultural studies-centred perspective, the book explores the complex entanglements of art and aesthetic practices with migration, flight and other forms of enforced dislocation and border/border crossings. We are interested in scholarly as well as artistic proposals that tackle the meaning of global migration for both art-making and theory production. It is our aim to contribute to the interdisciplinary field of research on the migratory turn in the arts with a publication that is shaped by multiple and diverse forms of knowledge production. The book envisages to give voice to current debates on racism and decolonisation, as well as epistemologies of the South. Against this backdrop and in close relation to theoretical approaches and case studies, the argumentative thrust of the book unfolds over five key concepts and sections: 1) Resistance/Racism, 2) Visibilities/Invisibilities, 3) Sites/Spaces, 4) Material/Materialization and 5) Practices/Performativity. These five sections are connected by way of a common line of inquiry ("cross-cutting topics") which considers agency and self-empowerment, gender and queerness, the importance of new digital and social media, and the role of religion. "Entangled Histories of Art and Migration" aims at sustainably anchoring research on migration within the field of global art history by introducing fresh categories and methodologies.
