Radical Reversals and Adapted Ideologies: Emigration and Avant-Garde Practices in the Twentieth Century

Jeanne Nugent, History of Art, University of Pennsylvania, Lübbener Strasse 23, 10997 Berlin (Kreuzberg); and Nicholas Sawicki, History of Art, University of Pennsylvania, Tichá 7/1290, Praha 5, 150 00, Czech Republic; send copies to both chairs.

In the twentieth century, various avant-garde practices and critical perspectives arose to challenge the traditional frameworks through which art entered public discourse. Yet political and economic circumstances caused many artists to emigrate. This geographical shift signaled profound adjustments in the aesthetic, stylistic, technical and ideological content of artists' works. This panel seeks to augment existing models of avant-garde inquiry (Poggioli, Bürger, Calinescu), with new questions: How are notions of home and homeland renewed in light of reconstituted, dissolved or newly drawn borders How do residual folk traditions, a former vernacular culture, or abandoned modes such as Socialist Realism inform high-art paradigms Given the significant historical reconfigurations of Europe's borders, panelists may wish to consider specific issues related to emigration within greater Europe.
