DRH 2002: Digital Resources for the Humanities

University of Edinburgh

8 - 11 September, 2002

A conference that brings together the creators, users, distributors, and custodians of digital resources in the Humanities.

Booking now open!

The annual Digital Resources for the Humanities conference is the major forum for all those involved in, and affected by, the digitization of our cultural heritage. The conference brings together scholars, teachers, publishers and broadcasters, librarians, curators and archivists, and computer and information specialists, providing an opportunity to consider the latest ideas in the creation and use of digital resources in all aspects of work in the humanities.

This year the conference will be held at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, UK, from 8 - 11 September 2002. Themes include:

Provision and management of access

Digital libraries, archives and museums

Time-based media and multimedia studies in music and performing arts

Other social sciences where these overlap significantly with the humanities

Network technologies used to support international community programmes

The anticipated convergence between televisual, communication and computing media and its effect on the humanities

Information analysis, design and modelling in humanities research

Knowledge representation, including visualization and simulation

The academic programme will comprise papers, panel discussions and poster presentations. This year's plenary speakers are:

Ted Nelson

Visiting Professor of Environmental Information, Keio University, Japan

Bernard Smith

Head of Unit, Cultural Heritage Applications, European Commission

Sarah Tyacke

Keeper of Public Records, UK Public Record Office

An exhibition of products and services of interest to participants will form an important part of the conference. The conference is known for its friendly atmosphere and an enjoyable range of social activities will also be provided.

The conference fee of £245 includes full conference attendance and all social activities (student concession available). Daily registration is also available.
