Call for Papers

2003 Buell Dissertation Colloquium on the history, theory, and criticism of American architecture, urbanism, and landscape.

The Temple Hoyne Buell Center for the Study of American Architecture invites submissions for its Biennial Dissertation Colloquium, to be held on Saturday, April 12, 2003, at Columbia University. This event brings together a select group of doctoral students working on dissertation topics related to the history, theory, and criticism of American architecture, urbanism, and landscape. Its purpose is to provide a forum for discussion of innovative scholarship in these fields. Eight to ten students from universities worldwide will be selected to present a twenty-minute talk based on their dissertation research, followed by a response from a distinguished scholar. The presentation should be based on a self-contained chapter or portion of the student's dissertation research; it should not be an overview or synthesis of the dissertation as a whole. "American" means any part or aspect of the American continents, including all of North and South America. Comparative and cross-disciplinary approaches are encouraged.

Students must be enrolled in an accredited doctoral program and have completed their coursework and at least one year of dissertation research. Submissions should include a complete draft of the intended presentation, including photocopies of illustrations. They must be postmarked no later than Monday, January 20, 2003. They must be accompanied by a cover sheet specifying the student's institutional affiliation, postal and e-mail addresses, and phone number; a 150-word abstract indicating the paper's relationship to the overall dissertation topic; and a brief statement from the student's principal adviser certifying the applicant's status (stage of completion) in the doctoral program. Faxed submissions will not be accepted. Application materials will not be returned.

Professor Robert Bruegmann, of the University of Illinois at Chicago, and Professor Mary McLeod, of Columbia University, will serve as conveners of the colloquium. Papers selected for presentation will be announced in mid-February. Each participating student will receive an honorarium of $250. Overnight accommodations near the Columbia campus will be provided if needed. Some additional funding toward travel expenses will be made available to students coming from a distance. A reception and dinner will follow the colloquium.

The Temple Hoyne Buell Center for the Study of American Architecture is part of Columbia University's Graduate School of Architecture, Planning and Preservation. Founded in 1982, the Center promotes the study of American architecture, urbanism, and landscape through a variety of scholarly and public programs.
