

Author handbook Renaissance

Henry Rasof

A specialist in the study of the Renaissance is sought by Facts on File to write a 170,000-word book on the subject geared toward students in high school and college. The audience also will include scholars, teachers, librarians, journalists, and general readers, so the book needs to be authoritative as well as accessible to a wide range of readers. The book is part of the publisher's "Handbook to Life in" series; already-published books include the "Handbook to Life in Ancient Greece" and the "Handbook to Life in Ancient Mesopotamia."

The candidate should have a PhD in the history or art (or related field) of the period. Excellent English-language skills and the ability to meet deadlines also are essential. Affiliation with a college or university, museum, or institute is preferred, as are at least some publications in the field. Residence in the United States, Canada, or the UK is preferred but not essential. The book also could be written by two or three individuals.

The author will receive a royalty contract.

Interested individuals should email (or mail) a c.v. and one or two short writing samples to:
