Michael Ann Holly

Clark Symposium

American Art Now
Aesthetics and Politics

Saturday, October 18, 2003

This Clark Symposium will focus on questions related to the meaning and significance of American art as both a concept and an actuality. Both American and non-American points of view on questions of nationality and representation will be considered. What are the aesthetic and political advantages, particularly today, of the fact that there is no single direction in contemporary American art? What problems obtain? Does it make sense anymore to speak categorically of "what's American"? After a morning of presentations, art historians, critics, and curators will join in a dialogue with the audience.

Scheduled to speak: Arthur Danto, Miwon Kwon, Richard Meyer, Larry Rinder, and Okwui Enwezor.
