10-11 June, 2004

'A Casa: People, Spaces and Objects in the Renaissance Interior' is a two-part symposium consisting of four full days of papers. The event will be divided between the Victoria & Albert Museum, London, and the Harvard University Center for Italian Renaissance Studies at Villa I Tatti, Florence, and we hope that as many people as possible will be able to attend both parts. This is the final symposium of a series related to 'The Domestic Interior in Italy, 1400-1600', a research project launched in 2003 culminating in a book and major exhibition at the Victoria & Albert Museum in 2006. An international group of scholars (largely funded by a Collaborative Research Grant from the Getty Grant Program) has been working together over the past year, starting to define the character and look of the Italian casa, and exploring the relationships between its rooms, contents and inhabitants.

The two-part symposium 'A Casa' will broaden the scope of this research, including many contributions from other scholars from a wide variety of disciplines. It will explore the non-princely urban house in Renaissance Italy as a setting for the development of art and culture, and for the unfolding of everyday life and rituals. Furnishings, objects and decoration associated with domestic life survive, and one aim of the symposium is to integrate evaluation of their considerable aesthetic impact with greater understanding of their audiences and consumers. Other issues of central concern for the symposium include topics such as entertainment and sociability, devotion and education, work and the marking of life events as expressed through the use of objects and spaces.
