Final Appeal: H-Net Spring Fundraising Drive

Mark

Dear H-Net Subscriber:

This letter concludes H-NET's Spring Fundraising Drive with my personal appeal to you to consider making a donation to H-Net, http://www.h-net.org/donations/

Thus far you may have read appeals written by H-Net officers and editors, and posted on the various H-Net discussion lists. We have tried to bring our message to you in the least intrusive way possible, while at the same time alerting you to our very real financial need.

We are deeply grateful for the donations that thus far have made a significant contribution to meeting our campaign objectives. We still need to meet major funding challenges, however, if we are to maintain and develop the services that so many readers have found essential to their professional lives.

H-Net began over ten years ago as a handful of discussion groups on topics related to history. Those present at the beginning knew it was a good idea, but no one could have imagined how successful it would be. To date there are over 150 H-Net discussion networks, most of which in addition to topical email discussions publish a wide range of content including book reviews, occasional papers, syllabi and important services such as the H-Net Job Guide and H-Net Announcements. All H-Net content and services are archived on a vast website, www.h-net.org, containing nearly one million discrete pages of content.

The scope of our regular service continues to amaze us:

* On average over 300,000 pieces of mail daily.

* H-Net Reviews has published over 10,000 scholarly reviews since 1994.

* The H-Net Job Guide has become one of the most important and widely distributed job vacancy bulletins in the Humanities and Social Sciences.

* H-Net Announcements annually post thousands of Calls for Papers, conference announcements and other items of interest to the academic community.

* Nearly 100,000 subscribers

These services have fundamentally changed the way working academics in the humanities and social science interact with their colleagues. H-Net is committed to maintaining free access and open access to all of these services.

If you have found H-Net services to be of value to you; if you or a colleague have found a job from the Job Guide, put together a conference panel through H-Net Announcements, have used an H-Net discussion list to seek out colleagues of like interests, have enjoyed the comprehensiveness and convenience of H-Net Reviews, or if you are just gratified that H-Net helps you "stay in touch" with your field, we hope you will consider making a donation at:

http://www.h-net.org/donations/

We thank you for your interest, contributions, and support.

This is a one-time-only mailing generated from H-Net's aggregate list of subscribers. There is no need to unsubscribe.

Sincerely,

Mark
