

Third Annual Material Culture Symposium (MCSES)

Material Culture Symposium

Scholars (MCSES)

The Center for Material Culture Studies at the University of Delaware is pleased to announce the Third Annual Material Culture Symposium for Emerging Scholars (MCSES) to be held Saturday, April 23, 2005 at the Winterthur Museum, Garden, and Library in Winterthur, Delaware.

Purpose of the Forum: This symposium provides emerging scholars with a venue for interdisciplinary dialogue centering on material culture.

By freeing scholars of chronological and topical restraints, the symposium encourages discussion across perceived boundaries of time, space and discipline. We seek papers that are grounded in the study of a particular object or objects but that address multidisciplinary themes—for example, the Atlantic World, comportment and the body, or texts and contexts. We invite graduate students from American Studies, Art History, Archaeology, English, History, and other departments to reevaluate the field of material culture studies, share their research, and explore new avenues of interpretation and critical thinking.

Format: Nine graduate students will give twenty-minute papers in panels of three speakers each. There will be two morning sessions and one afternoon session, each followed by a discussion period.

Discussion leaders this year are Amalia Amaki (Paul Jones Collection, University of Delaware), Paul Reber (Museum of Early Southern Decorative Arts), and Kathy Peiss (University of Pennsylvania). Gary Kulik, Deputy Director for Library, Collection Management, and Academic Programs at Winterthur Museum will also invite conference participants to tour Winterthur's library and its unparalleled collection of early American decorative arts. Coffee and pastries will be provided during a short morning break; lunch will be available for purchase in the Winterthur Visitors Center at the midday break. David Shields (University of South Carolina) will conclude the formal presentations with a summary address, after which speakers will have an opportunity to continue their conversation about material culture studies at dinner with the discussants and conference planners.

Sponsors: The symposium is co-sponsored by the Center for Material Culture Studies and Winterthur Museum, Garden and Library. CMCS is an umbrella entity that comprises the allied programs in material culture at the University of Delaware. These include the Black American Studies Program, Center for Historic Architecture and Design, History of American Civilization Program, Museum Studies Program, Visual Communications Group and Winterthur Program in Early American Culture, as well as the University Gallery and related departments, such as Anthropology, Art History, Art Conservation, Consumer Studies, English and History. Winterthur maintains the nation's premier collection of early American decorative arts and is an important catalyst for American material culture scholarship through its journal, Winterthur Portfolio, its publications and the funding of original research through its fellowship program.

How to submit your proposal: The proposal, not to exceed one single-spaced page, should clearly indicate both the subject matter of your paper and the interpretive or methodological problems that you intend to address. Preference will be given to papers that promise to generate provocative, productive discussion about issues central to material culture scholarship. Send your proposal, along with a current c.v. (no more than two-pages), to Heather Boyd and Daniel Claro at emerging.scholars@gmail.com

Deadline: Proposals must be received by November 8th. Speakers will be notified of the committee's decision by November 24th. Upon notification speakers will be asked to provide conference organizers with images (digital or electronic preferred) by December 12, 2004.

Website: <http://materialculture.udel.edu>

Check it often for updates during the year!

Note: Limited funding for travel assistance may be available, especially for speakers traveling long distances, but lodging for speakers will be provided at local students' homes.

--

The Third Annual Material Culture Symposium for Emerging Scholars (MCSES) emerging.scholars@gmail.com

=====

MCSES 2005 Committee Chairs:

- Heather Boyd, History of American Civilization, University of Delaware: hlbgoblue@yahoo.com
- Daniel Claro, History of American Civilization, University of

ArtHist.net

Delaware: dclaro@udel.edu

Reference:

CFP: Third Annual Material Culture Symposium (MCSES). In: ArtHist.net, Sep 22, 2004 (accessed Jun 14, 2026), <<https://arthist.net/archive/26613>>.