Peregrinations

New online journal of medieval art and architecture

<http://peregrinations.kenyon.edu>

It is with great pleasure that we announce the creation of Peregrinations, an online juried journal devoted to the study of medieval art and architecture. No subscription is necessary, as access is free to anyone who might be interested.

Call for papers For future issues we are actively seeking articles on any aspect of medieval art and architecture, including: long and short scholarly articles, scholarly book reviews, review articles on issues facing the field of medieval art history, interesting notes and announcements, useful website recommendations, new archeological discoveries, and recent museum acquisitions as well as calls for papers and conference listings.

One particular feature which we wish to draw your attention to is the photo articles and the photo bank. Here we hope to provide excellent-quality images that can be down-loaded and used by art historians in the classroom and in their research. To round out the scholarly portion of the journal, we are also seeking short, amusing excerpts from medieval sources, poorly-worded student papers, comments on the Middle Ages in movies, etc.

Please send your queries and/or articles via regular mail or e-mail to both:
