

METU PhD Program in Architectural History

Tomris E.A.

Middle East Technical University (Ankara-Turkey) now offers a PhD degree in Architectural History.

Besides the MA Program that has celebrated its 15th anniversary last year, METU PhD Program in Architectural History will be effective beginning in Fall 2005.

The MA and PhD Programs in Architectural History that are offered at METU aim to promote the production of knowledge and documentation on different periods and areas of the history of architectural culture and built environment through original research with an inter-cultural, contextual and multi-disciplinary approach; to provide training on past and present architectural developments and on relevant research methods in the field, and by doing so, to train experts equipped with the requisite general knowledge, analytical skills and initiative to undertake duties at academic institutions, research centers and state institutions as architectural historians; to disseminate the knowledge of architectural history of Turkey in both the national milieu and the world at large; and to assume an active role in the institutionalization of architectural history in Turkey.

Research interests and disciplinary backgrounds of the staff cover various fields of history and theory of art and architecture. The program is offered within the METU Faculty of Architecture but is also integrated with the METU Institute of Social Sciences and shaped by the concerns of the humanities.

There is no disciplinary limitation for the applicants, but applications from the graduates of architecture and related fields in the fine arts, humanities and social sciences are especially invited. Applicants from all fields are required to demonstrate their interest in architectural history through transcripts, satisfactory performance in entrance examinations and a portfolio (optional). As the medium of instruction is English, proficiency in English is required of all applicants.
