Representing Space in the Renaissance

A one-day postgraduate conference to be held at the University of Warwick on 28 July 2005

Drawing on and partaking of the recent 'spatial turn' in the humanities and social sciences, this interdisciplinary conference addresses the uses and meanings of space in a variety of Renaissance texts. Graduate speakers from the universities of Delaware, London, Paris, Sydney, Warwick, York and Zagreb will investigate the ways in which a range of early modern literary and visual media incorporate space into their representational strategies and, in turn, what their mobilisation of spatial motifs reveals about broader cultural configurations and concerns.
