The relationship (or rather, the extensive range of relationships) between image and text has a long, varied, and not infrequently contentious history, as documented by its investigation within a range of rhetorical, literary, cultural, semiotic, art-historical, media-oriented, philosophical, anthropological, and historical paradigms. The September 2005 Wisconsin Workshop will focus attention on two specific aspects of the intersection of images and texts: images as a subcategory of writing, and forms of writing that appear as, in, or as part of images.
