ARCHITECTURE

University of Melbourne Australia - Dean (Australia)

The Faculty of Architecture Building and Planning has an outstanding reputation for high quality research and teaching in all of the built environment disciplines. With research income more than doubling over the last three years, the Faculty has a thriving research culture, a diverse student body and a strong and active relationship with the professions. Restructuring undergraduate programs, establishing a Graduate School and completing plans for a new purpose-built facility are key priorities for the Faculty as part of its contribution towards the realization of University strategic goals (see www.unimelb.edu.au/vc/consultation/strategy.html).

An exciting and challenging opportunity exists for an academic to provide strong leadership to the Faculty. With high visibility and wide recognition in the field at both national and international levels you will place a high priority on increasing research performance and play a prominent role in developing built environment policy in state, national and international arenas. You will have a commitment to education and the development of industry and community partnerships.

To be successful, you will have demonstrated academic leadership and strategic management skills. You will have experience in innovative organizational planning and implementation, leadership in a complex organization, and sound knowledge of the trends in the management of contemporary universities. You will have appropriate qualifications and an internationally recognized record of academic and research achievement in the built environment disciplines.
