We invite applicants for a two-year postdoctoral fellowship position at Stanford University researching comparative urban development and its environmental effects in the United States and Asia. With funding from the Woods Institute for the Environment, the research project brings together history, environmental science and policy, and modern geographical analysis to make a comparative study of suburban-style development in Bangalore, India, Shenzhen, China and the greater San Jose region in the U.S. The goals of the project are fourfold: 1) define the spatial extent and distribution of urban form and urban growth for three extended metropolitan areas; 2) understand the drivers behind low-density suburban growth; 3) assess the environmental implications of such growth patterns; and 4) identify the policy levers and institutional mechanisms that can support alternative growth patterns that are both environmentally sustainable and politically pragmatic.

The postdoctoral fellow will be a core member of a research team led by Principal Investigator Karen C. Seto (Geological and Environmental Sciences) and Co-P.I. Margaret O'Mara (History). The fellow will be expected to conduct both quantitative and qualitative research using primary and secondary historical documents, government reports and data sets, and interviews with local stakeholders. Required skills include GIS and spatial analysis. At least one two-week visit to field sites in Asia will be expected and sponsored by project funds. Ph.D.'s from all relevant disciplines are welcome to apply; those whose research experience incorporates both historical and geographical analysis are particularly encouraged.

The appointment is for two years beginning September 1, 2006. Candidates must have their Ph.D. degree in hand by that date, and must have received their Ph.D. no earlier than September 2003. The fellowship carries a stipend of $43,000 and benefits.

Please send a CV, a brief statement, and names and telephone numbers of three references to both Professor Karen Seto (kseto@stanford.edu) and Professor Margaret O'Mara (momara@stanford.edu). Applications will be accepted on a rolling basis, and we expect to make a final hiring decision by July 15, 2006.

Stanford University welcomes applications from women and minorities and is an affirmative action/equal opportunity employer.
