H-Net Job Guide

Yale University - Museum Assistant II

[Department of African Art]

(CT, United States)

Yale University Art Gallery announces a vacancy in the Department of African Art. Yale University Art Gallery is a teaching museum, and engages students and professors both in classes and as a working laboratory for students employed as assistants and guides. As the oldest college art gallery in the U. S., it has a long history of serving the academic community and the public. The new Department of African Art was established in January 2004, with the donation of the private collection and endowment from Yale alumnus, Charles B. Benenson, enriching the existing Yale collection. In December 2006, the newly renovated Louis Kahn Building will open, with a large new exhibition space for African Art. The Department staff includes the curator, museum assistant, three bursary students, and usually one or more undergraduate and graduate interns.
