Presented to the university by Paul Mellon (Yale Class of 1929), the Yale Center for British Art (YCBA) houses the largest and most comprehensive collection of British art outside the United Kingdom. The collection of approximately 2,000 paintings, several hundred sculptures, 50,000 prints and drawings, and 35,000 rare books and manuscripts reflects the development of British art, life, and thought from the Elizabethan period onward. The Center offers a year-round schedule of exhibitions and educational programs, including lectures, symposia, films, concerts, tours, and other special events. The YCBA also provides numerous opportunities for scholarly research, such as residential fellowships. Academic resources of the Center include the Reference Library and Photo Archive, Conservation Laboratory, and Study Room for examining prints, drawings, rare books, and manuscripts from the collection. An affiliated institution in London, the Paul Mellon Centre for Studies in British Art (PMC), awards grants and fellowships, publishes academic titles, and sponsors Yale's oldest credit-granting undergraduate study abroad program, Yale-in-London, which is run in coordination with the YCBA.
