The Cleveland Institute of Art, with the support of The Cleveland Foundation, invites you to attend on Apr. 20-21, "Art/Design/Knowledge," a conference exploring the current status and future of graduate education in art. The event will focus on the need for a Ph.D. in the visual arts and design with an eye toward the collaborative creation of an international center for graduate research in the visual arts and design in Cleveland.

Featured speakers will address the concept of the Ph.D. relative to the M.F.A., as well as the crucial relationship of the arts to the city:

Carol Coletta (CEOs for Cities), well known for her forward thinking on urban design issues and the building of creative communities;

Timothy Emlyn Jones (Burren College of Art, Ireland), long time advocate for doctoral education in the arts;

Leonard Lehrer (Columbia College Chicago), who served on the College Art Association committee that originally identified the M.F.A. as the terminal degree in the arts;

Victor Margolin (University of Illinois, Chicago), influential design historian and theorist.

Roundtable sessions will allow for the intensive discussion of issues pertinent to innovative alliances in advanced visual studies.

Due to limited space and given the nature of this conference participation will be limited—if you are interested in attending please have them contact Anna Cottos at acottos@cia.edu.
