

Asian Design History (Victoria & Albert Museum)

Alicia Volk

Dear colleagues,

I am forwarding the announcement of a new academic position in Asian Design History at the Victoria & Albert Museum and Royal College of Art, London. The post involves the design and implementation of a new program in Asian Design History. Questions can be directed to Dr. Glenn Adamson (Head of Graduate Studies, Victoria & Albert Museum) at: g.adamson@vam.ac.uk.

All best wishes,

Alicia Volk

Tutor, Asian Design History

History of Design V&A/RCA

£36,927 - £41,294 pa

The Royal College of Art (RCA) and Victoria & Albert Museum (V&A) are seeking to appoint a full-time Tutor in Asian Design History to work across the two institutions.

This is a new role; as Tutor, you will teach students on the V&A/RCA MA course in History of Design; lead the Asian Design History specialism within the course; undertake research in Design History and contribute to scholarship in the V&A Museum. You will be taking a leading role in integrating the Museum's Asian collections into course teaching and be involved in designing and implementing curriculum within this new area of teaching.

You must have a proven research reputation; broad interest in the development of design history as a discipline; teaching and administrative experience, preferably at postgraduate level, and a commitment to working within the V&A and Royal College of Art.

Further information and an application form (no CVs) are available from the Personnel Assistant, Royal College of Art, Kensington Gore, London, SW7 2EU. Tel: 020 7590 4138 or e-mail personnel@rca.ac.uk. Please see our website www.rca.ac.uk

Closing date: 3rd July 2007
