Framing the Other: 30 Years After Orientalism

9.30am – 6.30pm, Saturday, 26 April 2008 (with registration from 9.00am)

Kenneth Clark Lecture Theatre, The Courtauld Institute of Art,
Somerset House, Strand, London WC2R 0RN

Organised by: Aliya Abykayeva-Tiesenhausen and Melanie Vandenbrouck

As recent political developments have once again brought to the fore the question of East/West relationships, the thirtieth anniversary of the publication of Edward Said's Orientalism, comes as a suitable opportunity to re-examine the impact and currency of Said's key arguments. This conference will focus on the influence of Said's legacy to analyse visual culture as a crucial component of 'Orientalism's' (and more generally imperialism's) political self-justification, in the discursive construction of the 'Other'. We will hear papers stemming from the nineteenth century, when imperialism was arguably produced by the development of racial thinking and the rise of European nationalism, to the turbulent present period. Addressing the vision of a 'plural' West, we wish to take up the issues raised by both obvious and surprising 'Others' with keynote lectures by Mary Roberts (University of Sydney) and Robert Fisk (The Independent).
