The phenomenon of international exhibitions can be traced back to the nineteenth century when they were initiated to support imperialist and nationalist cultures. Since the late twentieth century, however, globalization has contributed to the birth of a number of new international exhibitions in East Asia. Taking the formats of biennial or triennial, these lately emerged international exhibitions are reconfiguring the relations between East/West, Asian/Global, and Self/Other. From the perspective of globalization and nationalism, this session concerns these exhibitions within their individual political, cultural, and historical frameworks and in the meantime calls for theoretical, historical and even psychoanalytic investigations of them. We will ask: How is the idea of nation articulated or re-defined through international exhibitions? How do these international exhibitions mobilize new artistic expressions and cultural identities? How do they transform the art scene of the Asian world?

Proposals should be sent by May 9, 2008, to:
