Studies

and

Kunsthistorisches Institut in Florenz - Max-Planck-Institut

The establishment and preservation of the Medici principate was linked to an international marriage policy through which the rulers of Tuscany strove to win powerful allies and to promote their dynastic ambitions.

This conference explores the patronage of women who became involved in such marriage strategies and who were consequently in a position to act as cultural (and sometimes also political) mediators between two European courts. The chosen timeframe encompasses the two centuries of the Medici principate between the wedding of Caterina de' Medici (1533) and the death of Anna Maria Luisa de' Medici (1743). Protagonists of the conference are the French queens Caterina and Maria de' Medici, the Grand Duchesses Eleonora di Toledo, Giovanna d'Austria, Cristina di Lorena, Maria Maddalena d'Austria and Vittoria della Rovere, the Archduchess Claudia de' Medici, the Princess Violante Beatrice di Baviera and the Electress Palatine Anna Maria Luisa de' Medici. The papers will examine the role of women from the Medici family at other courts as well as the cultural initiatives of the "foreign" women who became Grand Duchesses of Florence.

This conference, which is co-sponsored by Villa I Tatti - The Harvard University Center for Italian Renaissance Studies and the Kunsthistorisches Institut in Florenz - Max-Planck-Institut, is the last in a series of three events within the framework of the collaborative research project MEFISTO (Medici-Frauen Interdisziplinär: Soziale Rollen, kultureller Transfer, maezenatisches OEuvre). MEFISTO was initiated in 2004, hosted by the Biblioteca Hertziana and made possible through the generous support of the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft (see <http://www.biblhertz.it/deutsch/forschung/MEFISTO.pdf>).
