The Art, Architecture, and Literature of the Gilded Age
The 13th Annual Salve Regina University Conference on Cultural and Historic Preservation
October 15-17, 2009

The term "Gilded Age" is but one of many, such as the Age of Opulence, Age of Energy, the Brown, Mauve and White decades, and the American Renaissance, that attempts to characterize a particular period, c1860-c1910, in American history. Fueled by the great prosperity after the Civil War, artists, writers, designers, architects and patrons looked both internally and abroad in an attempt to prove the United States equal to the Old World. These efforts pervaded all forms of artistic media, especially art, interior design, architecture, sculpture, literature and photography. Artistic and literary sources for the Gilded Age were wide ranging from the American Colonies to European Renaissances to the orient, and resulted in multi-media presentations of American supremacy.

Salve Regina University's 13th Annual Conference on Cultural and Historic Preservation will explore the application of these ideas to the art, architecture, interior design, decoration, and literature of Gilded Age epoch. Proposals for papers or panels may examine such subjects as: the interplay between architecture and literature; the Gilded Age interior; the exotic and/or oriental interior; European architectural models; technology and Gilded Age architecture; photography and its role as a transmitter of architectural ideals; artistic and/or architectural books; conspicuous consumption and the arts; the role of historic American architecture in the Gilded Age; patronage; nationalism; and the challenges in preserving Gilded Age arts, architecture and literature today. In addition, as the Gilded Age was not everyone's experience, papers may also explore related period ideas, such as African-American art, architecture and literature, immigrant artistic expressions and/or the relationship between other ethnic or minority groups and the arts.

We welcome submissions from scholars of all academic disciplines, as well as from younger scholars and graduate students. Proposals should include 250-word abstracts and CVs. Please send proposals by March 15,
