

Visual Arts and Practices in the Middle East (Arab Studies Journal)

Dina A. Ramadan

ARAB STUDIES JOURNAL

CALL FOR PAPERS

VISUAL ARTS AND PRACTICES IN THE MIDDLE EAST

Deadline: 28 August 2009

The last decade has seen tremendous changes in the Arab and Middle Eastern artscape(s). These changes have played out on numerous levels. Regionally, there has been a mushrooming of "independent" art spaces, artist-run initiatives, and large-scale annual festivals. In terms of international exposure, artists from the Middle East have gradually been gaining access to Western art capitals albeit under the guise of large, all-encompassing regional shows and are making increasingly regular appearances on the biennale circuit. Most recently, the region has witnessed the burgeoning of a Gulf-based art market, supported by an impressive infrastructure of commercial galleries, individual collectors, and world-class museums. Such transformations have of course been the subject of numerous art publications, in attempts to consolidate a growing audience base and generate a critical discourse surrounding art practices in the region. Scholarship on the Middle East, however, has largely neglected artistic practices and aesthetic concerns as socially, politically, and culturally formative sites worthy of examination. Similarly, the field of art history continues to restrict scholarship on artistic production from the region to the pre-modern era under the rubric of Islamic art.

The Arab Studies Journal is soliciting scholarly contributions that critically assess the visual arts and art practices in Middle East from a range of disciplinary backgrounds. We seek papers that consider the relationship between art practices and art institutional imaginings, in either an historical or a contemporary sense. We are particularly interested in cross-regional comparative approaches that consider the possible interplay of visual arts and art practices outside the Middle East.

Submit manuscripts online at: www.arabstudiesjournal.org

ArtHist.net

Dina A. Ramadan
MEALAC
Columbia University

Reference:

CFP: Visual Arts and Practices in the Middle East (Arab Studies Journal). In: ArtHist.net, May 29, 2009
(accessed Sep 21, 2025), <<https://arthist.net/archive/31598>>.