The 2A Magazine Spring 2010 issue #13 focusses on Museums of and in the Middle East

Museums of the Middle East

[Muses of the Orient]

Museums at the beginnings of the western world were temples to the Muses, the nine young goddesses who presided over the arts, literature and the sciences. Early museums began as private collections of individuals and institutions housing objects of scientific, artistic or historical importance for public viewing through exhibits. In the museum, the object, in many cases removed in time, place and circumstance from its original context, becomes a communicative tool that represents the past and its significance in relation to the present. This representation makes the museum a unique place, a hybrid space of diverse outcomes that distinguish content from surface.

Yet museum architecture is the new 21st century cultural enterprise, branding, corporate entities and big business. This museum-mania has lifted the role of the museum from a collection of artifacts to sensationalism, spectacle and the Bilbao effect. Issue#13 of 2A magazine will map the current state of culture, the role of the museum and the making of institutions as spaces to accommodate art and culture in the Middle East. These organizations bring about a new and innovative 'urban abstraction' and create new challenges and contradictions for the region: east vs. west, high vs. popular taste, orientalism vs. modernism, colonialism vs. national identity, censorship vs. participation, authenticity vs. reenactment, identity vs. multiplicity.

The plethora of developments over the last ten years in the Middle East has resulted in generating new and dynamic urban conditions and it is now shifting to 'culture'. This has brought about a renewed interest for the construction of institutions for art, architecture, history, heritage and performance.

Contributors to the magazine may consider one or more of the following themes relevant to building cultural institutions of the 21st century

Museums as Branding
Museums as Education
Museums as Architectural spaces
Museums as Art
