

Kornbluth photography archive

Genevra Kornbluth

After two decades teaching art history and doing photography for my own use, I have started a photography business. As part of that project I am posting my archive of images online for all to use without charge. So far I have posted about 900 images, and I am adding more all the time. The archive includes material from all periods of western art starting with the Neolithic, though its greatest strength is in medieval and Roman art. I am posting all images at the right size for classroom use (PowerPoint friendly).

I am sharing my images partly out of loyalty to academe, and partly in the hope of exchanging their free use for exposure. My web site becomes increasingly visible to potential paying clients via Google and other search engines as more people visit and link to it. I also license my photographs for publication, so of course I want scholars to know that they exist.

I am sending this message now so that people can use my archive during the current academic term. Also, I will soon be making a research/photography trip to Europe (from America). I will be in London, Paris, Mainz, Ravenna, Budapest, Szekszárd, and Kaposvár. Anyone who needs images from places in or near the cities where I will be working could piggyback a request on to the trip without having to pay major travel expenses.

My general web address is www.KornbluthPhoto.com .

To go directly to the historical archive, the address is www.KornbluthPhoto.com/archive-1.html

Best regards to all,

Genevra Kornbluth

Kornbluth@KornbluthPhoto.com

Reference:

WWW: Kornbluth photography archive. In: ArtHist.net, Sep 20, 2010 (accessed Apr 18, 2026), <<https://arthist.net/archive/32979>>.