Architecture und Democratization:

Overlooked witnesses to Allied intervention in occupied Germany after 1945

In 2019 and 2020, Germany marked 70 years since its post-war division into East and West and 30 years since reunification. Both anniversaries offer renewed occasion to examine the processes that led to the creation of the two German states in 1949, together with the premises on which they were founded and which seemed vindicated in 1990: premises such as the inevitability of democracy, the value of internationalism, and the possibility of a peaceful and stable world order. Given the current questioning of these ideas not only here but throughout Europe and beyond, such a re-examination seems relevant now in a way that it has rarely been before.

Architecture, too, must be part of this discussion. Taking seriously the notion that "democracy must be made visible if it is to be understood and embraced" (Michael Dreyer), the first goal of the conference is to call attention to forgotten or neglected artefacts of Western and Soviet cultural-political intervention in Germany's built environment, with a view to creating a broader as well as a more detailed picture of this activity.

Due to the ongoing coronavirus pandemic, the conference will be held online as a Zoom Webinar.

Simultaneous translation of the German-language presentations into English will be offered.
