

Art Researcher, HENI Group, London

London

Lai-Kay Man

We are looking for a bright and enthusiastic individual to undertake a research project, predominantly focusing on stained glass windows.

It is likely the candidate will be an Art History graduate, or similar discipline, well versed in detailed information gathering and be exceptionally good at pulling together a large array of material into an online archive.

The successful candidate will likely have either a first-class degree, Masters or PhD and have exceptional verbal, written and analytical ability. Forensic in approach and factually driven, they must also be able to work autonomously and flexibly to lead the project. Some prior experience within the world of stained glass would be an advantage but not prerequisite.

In return, the successful candidate will gain significant exposure to world-class experts in their field and benefit from an excellent working environment. The opportunity offers the chance for a talented researcher to apply their academic prowess within a commercial and highly regarded organisation.

Salary will range between £20,000-30,000 per annum, depending on experience level.

To apply, please send your CV and cover letter to recruitment@heni.com. Due to the expected high volume of applications, we can regretfully only be in touch with those we wish to progress with.

Reference:

JOB: Art Researcher, HENI Group, London. In: ArtHist.net, Feb 26, 2022 (accessed Dec 14, 2025), <<https://arthist.net/archive/36005>>.