The everyday life in a hospital has always been related to different objects and practices that make up the material expression of established human relationships and the very functioning of such places. In its spatial or topographical, chronological and historical and anthropological dimensions, material culture is related to the purpose or meaning that objects have for a particular people or culture and is essential in defining a society's cultural identity.

The study of material culture as a scientific object has progressed, although historiography has paid little attention to hospital material culture.

Thus, the XIII Abrils del Hospital (Lisbon, 15-17 April) will address material culture as an indicator of hospitals' economic power and social prestige throughout the Middle and Early Modern Ages.

The focus will not only extend to isolated objects, but also to human productions with a relevant social function:

- social function of objects
- cultural production and consumption
- material culture patrimonialisation practices

Those interested in attending this international meeting are to send a proposal stating the participant's name, email address, a brief CV, a title and a brief summary of the presentation (300 words max.). These must be sent no later than January 15, 2024 to the following email address: abrils.hospital@ub.edu.
