

Art & Aesthetics – Marx in the Anthropocene (Venice, 11–14 Mar 25)

Università luav di Venezia, Venice, Mar 11–14, 2025

Deadline: Oct 31, 2024

Linn Burchert, Zentralinstitut für Kunstgeschichte

Art & Aesthetics regarding "Marx in the Anthropocene: Capital, Nature, Ecology, Environment" at Università luav di Venezia, Venice, March 11-14, 2025.

The claim that ecological collapse represents one of the main great challenges of the 21st century has now become a truism. It is no longer a belief held by groups associated with ecological militancy: mainstream media, international organizations, multinational corporations, and areas traditionally far removed from what is usually understood as ecological sensibilities have, for a decade now, shown clear awareness of the urgency of the climate problem. Nevertheless, as the data note, the awareness about, for example, the climate problem is not matched by real effective political action on the global scale capable of countering it. This conference aims to make a Marxist-oriented critical rereading of the reasons that prevent the production of effective actions capable of meeting what currently appears to be the fundamental need of humanity: a radical socio-ecological transformation.

Building on a debate that is well established in European and non-European areas, this conference aims to establish the first opportunity for international discussion in Italy on the relationship between Marxism and the fundamental questions related to the environment and ecology. More specifically, the question concerns the possibility for Marxist thought to critically illuminate the contradictions that prevent a comprehensive interpretation of the relations between society and nature. Through the perhaps overused name "anthropocene," the conference aims to focus the discussion on the rifts and tensions that characterize the present era and to screen them in the light of Marxist thought.

The conference will be held at the Università luav di Venezia on March 11-14, 2025.

The organization invites scholars to participate at the call by sending abstracts of papers, and closed panels (max. 4 people and 2 co-organizers) on the following fields:

- Art and aesthetics (keynote speaker Linn Burchert)
- Urbanism (keynote speakers to be confirmed)
- Philosophy, Natural History (keynote speakers John Bellamy Foster, Angelica Nuzzo)
- Environmental sociology, Social movements (keynote speakers Nancy Fraser and Brett Clark)
- Eco-marxism and Ecological Economics (keynote speakers Joan Martinez Alier and M. Graziano Ceddia)
- Society and Natural Science (keynote speakers Helena Sheehan, Salvatore Engel-Di Mauro)

- Socio-Ecological transformation (keynote speakers Qingzhi Huan, Emanuele Leonardi)

A possible, but not exclusive, list of topics that could be explored are: Historical roots of Ecological Marxism, Marx and Engels' conception of nature, dialectical materialism and nature, Marx and the philosophy of nature, Ecological imperialism and the global ecological crisis, Climate justice movements and anti-capitalism, Capital Accumulation and Planetary Boundaries, Marxist Analysis of Corporate Environmentalism and Greenwashing, Socialist States and the Environment, Working Class and Ecology, Urban Planning from a eco-Marxist perspective, Extractivism and Energy Production, Critique of Science and Technology, Environmental Justice, gender, class and racialized people, Economic and Ecological Planning, Critique of capitalist Sustainability and Circular Economy.
