

Queer Avant-Garde (Bochum, 4–5 Dec 24)

Marie Jahoda Center for international Gender Studies, Kunstsammlungen der Ruhr-Universität Bochum, Dec 4–05, 2024

Registration deadline: Nov 30, 2024

Christian Wandhoff, Ruhr-Universität Bochum

Queerness and queer body practices (cross- dressing, gender-bending) are omnipresent in the artistic practices of the 'classical' avant- gardes, as Man Ray's famous photographs of Marcel Duchamp as Rose Sélavy show. Nevertheless, there are still only a few studies on the intersections of queerness, sexual orientation, gender identity and the art of classical modernism(s). When queer sensibility is described as a "creative 'energy'" (Jack Babuscio) that is fuelled by the knowledge of living in a world of social inequality and is situated contrary to the norm, are sexual orientation and gender identity ontological for the formation of avant- gardes? What role does queerness play for and within classical modernism(s)? And how does this relate to other categories such as race, class, gender and place? Can there be a 'sexual avant-garde sensibility'? And if so, to what extent is this necessarily linked to sexual orientation?
