

Belonging: Native American Art in Settler Contexts (Norman/online, 6-7 Mar 25)

University of Oklahoma, Norman, OK, USA / Online, Mar 6-07, 2025

Emily Burns

The symposium "Belonging: Native American Art in Settler Contexts" at the University of Oklahoma is organized by the Charles M. Russell Center for the Study of Art of the American West and takes place from March 6-7, 2025.

It is funded by

- The Initiative for the Humanities and Arts in Society Seed Grant
- The Russell Center's Merkel Family Foundation Endowment
- The Terra Foundation for American Art
- The OU Department of Women's and Gender Studies

The term "belonging" increasingly gains currency in discussions of Native American art and material culture in museums, art history, and Native American and Indigenous Studies. This multi-vocal interdisciplinary symposium analyzes "belongings" and celebrates creative practices in which Native American writers and makers have engaged with the appropriation and display of Native American Belongings in museum spaces.

With community members, artists, art historians, and curators, the discussions consider how "belongings" might be defined and how creative and academic writing, art, and oral histories grapple with settler colonial appropriation of Belongings.

The symposium explores how the concept points to agency, animacy and fundamentally distinctive epistemological systems. While in many settler contexts, "belonging" signifies possession, paralleling displacement and genocide of Native Americans, in many Indigenous knowledge systems, the term speaks to the relationality of belonging to and within a community.
