Herrenhäuser Symposium

Loyal Subversion – Caricatures from the Personal Union between England and Hanover 1714-1837

The political constellation of the personal union between England and Hanover with the figure of a foreign king as a mediator between separate states became a determining factor and was in itself a historical condition for the emergence and the development of caricatures in England after the Glorious Revolution. As a political weapon of the opposition and as a manifestation of public opinion, the caricatures affected the establishment: on the one hand, their visual potential was a threat to the sovereign, on the other hand they helped to stabilize his leadership.

What contents do they show? Does the artistic become political? Is there something like an institutionalized form of political perception? Or is this visual criticism nothing else but a loyal subversion of their subjects?

The Herrenhäuser Symposium "Loyal Subversion – Caricatures from the Personal Union between England and Hanover 1714-1837" is organized by the Volkswagen Foundation and the Wilhelm Busch – Deutsches Museum für Karikatur und Zeichenkunst.
