SEMINAR SERIES.

Between the personal and the collective:

archives, memory and remembrance in contemporary artistic practice.

This online seminar series brings together researchers and arts practitioners from different geographical contexts to reflect on archives and contemporary artistic practice. Focusing on the interactions and contradictions between personal and collective memory, the series aims to question 'official' histories and highlight alternative modes of representation.

Speakers in this seminar series engage with the archive as artistic material and source, but also as a knowledge structure, an institution, and a place for reflection. Sessions are organised thematically, and some of the guiding notions for discussion include self-determination, colonial erasure, gender-based identities, community-building, performativity and intergenerational memory.

Throughout these sessions, we will problematise how archives are constituted, accessed and explored, and how they are mobilised to create normative pasts. We will also consider the role that artistic and academic narratives can play in sparking collective action, and what are the impacts and potentialities of revisiting the past in contemporary artistic practice.

All sessions take place online between 4pm-6pm Lisbon time
