Southeast Asia's Art Histories Postgraduate Symposium (online): "The Merry Sounds of Hammers", online, October, 27-28, 2025.

The symposium is presented by the School of Humanities at Nanyang Technological University, Singapore. It is presented in collaboration with the School of Culture and Communication at the University of Melbourne, and Southeast of Now: Directions in Contemporary and Modern Art in Asia, a scholarly journal published by NUS Press at the National University of Singapore.

Writing in 1903, the Javanese writer Kartini (1879-1904) described a "little village behind the hill where the great family of artists lives," in which could be heard "the merry sounds of hammers and the ringing of metal... it is the welcome greeting of the woodworkers."

With a similar spirit of curiosity and attention to communities of creative and critical practice, this postgraduate symposium will be held online October 27-28, 2025, starting each day at 4 pm Singapore time (6 pm Melbourne time) and ending each day at 9 pm Singapore time (11 pm Melbourne time). Presenters are currently enrolled postgraduate (Masters or Doctoral) students, or those who have graduated from a postgraduate degree after July 1, 2024.

The symposium is co-convened by Roger Nelson (Art History, School of Humanities, Nanyang Technological University, Singapore) and Simon Soon (Art History and Curatorship, School of Culture and Communications, University of Melbourne).

Cash prizes will be presented to the three most outstanding papers, to encourage development for publication.
