Rethinking Carlo Maratti (1625–1713): Patronage, Practice, Reception

Carlo Maratti (1625–1713) stands as one of the most significant painters of late Baroque Rome. Celebrated in his own time as the natural heir to Raphael and Carracci, and the leading painter of the Eternal City, Maratti's extraordinarily long and successful career linked the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, shaping academic practice, taste, and artistic institutions well beyond his lifetime. His activity as painter, restorer, collector, 'principe' of the Accademia di San Luca, and head of a large and international workshop placed him at the centre of Rome's artistic and cultural networks.

Despite this prominence, Maratti's reputation in art history has long oscillated between admiration and neglect. While traditional scholarship often portrayed him as the embodiment of academic classicism or as a symbol of stylistic decline after Bernini and Cortona, more recent research has begun to reassess the complexity of his artistic persona and his impact on the European art world. Yet, major questions remain regarding his patronage, his practices, his economic strategies, his workshop organisation, and his reception.

Marking the 400th anniversary of Carlo Maratti's birth, this international conference seeks to offer a critical reassessment of the artist and his legacy. Bringing together established scholars and emerging researchers, it provides a forum for exploring new perspectives on Maratti's art, practice, and influence. Special emphasis is placed on the study of unpublished archival materials, newly identified documents, and analytical approaches that shed light on the dynamics of patronage, artistic production, restoration, collecting, and reception.

The conference will take place in person at the Royal Netherlands Institute in Rome (Via Omero 10/12). Presentations will be given in English and Italian. The keynote lecture, delivered by Dr Arnold A. Witte (University of Amsterdam), will conclude the first day of the conference and can also be attended remotely via Zoom (upon registration).
