

Summer University 2026: Research on Seventeenth-Century Art (Pais, 8-9 Jul 26)

Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale de France, Richelieu Site - Conference Room, Jul 8–09, 2026

Deadline: Mar 1, 2026

COUSINIE, Université de Rouen

Call for applications:

“Docere, Delectare, Movere”

the Summer University “Research on Seventeenth-Century Art,” Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France.

The second edition of the Summer University aims to provide a special place and time for professionals and young researchers (doctoral students and Master's students working on images in art history, history, literature, and philosophy) to meet and engage in the most stimulating interdisciplinary research on European and non-European art of the 17th century (broadly defined as from the 1580s to the 1720s).

Supervised by teacher-researchers from several disciplines (art history, history, literature, philosophy), various workshops will provide an opportunity to present and discuss the research carried out by the new generation of researchers.

The theme chosen for the 2026 edition is "Docere, Delectare, Movere" (To teach, to please, to move).

The call for applications [including a french version], which is sure to be of interest to some of your students, is online on the project's blog: <https://universite17.hypotheses.org/>

Proposals for participation must be submitted before March 1, 2026.

Research on Seventeenth-Century Art

SUMMER UNIVERSITY 2026

“Docere, Delectare, Movere”

Paris/Bibliothèque nationale de France/Salle de conférences/July 8-9, 2026

CALL FOR APPLICATIONS

The second edition of the Summer School will be hosted by the Bibliothèque nationale de France (Richelieu site - Conference Room) and the Institut national d'histoire de l'art (Inha). The event will provide a unique opportunity for professionals and young researchers to meet and discuss the most stimulating interdisciplinary research on European and non-European art of the 17th century (broadly defined as the period from 1580 to 1720).

Supervised by teacher-researchers from several disciplines (art history, history, literature, philosophy), various workshops will provide an opportunity to present and discuss the research carried out by the new generation of researchers.

Institutional support from the project partners will enable individual grants to be offered to cover part of the costs incurred by external participants (from other regions and countries).

The event, separate from the academic calendar and obligations, aims to be inclusive, diverse, and participatory; it will include at least one group visit.

“Docere, Delectare, Movere”

To instruct, to delight, to move: in the seventeenth century, the harmonious combination of these three verbs described the art of the rhetorician. Is the same true for painters, musicians, and architects? Fifty years ago, after a long period of contempt, the Baroque was reevaluated in response to this question, which implies attention to the educational, sensory, and emotional effectiveness of works of art. At the time, studies turned to the instrumentalization of image, music, and architecture in Catholic pastoral care, both in Europe and beyond through colonial missionary enterprises (to instruct). We also examined the theatrical, and sometimes multimedia, dimension of art production and the question of affetti (to move). The link between these two functions and delight (to delight) was revealed by studies of the history of taste and collecting, but there was also renewed interest in the erotic dimension of the effectiveness of art in connection with the more general question of the power of images.

Even at that time, objections to this prospect were raised, opposing, for example, the indeterminacy of certain representations of affects to their supposed legibility. Resistance to the reduction of art to propaganda also manifested itself, examining the degree to which social actors themselves adhered to prescriptive discourses in their use of images, or leading to more subtle models, particularly in the political sphere. The importance accorded to sensitivity in seventeenth-century artistic experimentation has undergone considerable development both in studies of art theory and in the analysis of works, often in connection with a renewed focus on the material dimension of objects. In addition to painting, sculpture, and architecture, numerous works have focused on the role of illustration in scientific and literary publishing. Finally, it should be noted that beyond the Catholic world of Europe, images produced and used in Protestant and even multi-denominational spaces have been analyzed through the prism of one or other of these issues, and that the issues addressed during these sessions are not limited to Europe or to religious questions.

By proposing “Docere, Delectare, Movere” as the theme for the 2026 summer school, we wish to solicit contributions on a very wide range of subjects and questions. It will be possible to focus on just one of the three terms in the title, or on the connection between two of them, or even to reject them in part or in their entirety.

Case studies that are only partially and specifically related to the theme are welcome.

Apply

Applicants, whether art historians or non-art historians working on the image, must be enrolled in a doctoral program or in a master's program and wish to pursue doctoral research, or be heritage curators in training or recently appointed.

They will submit an application as a “speaker” (a 20-minute oral presentation on the proposed theme) or as a “discussant” (moderation of sessions, summary, comments, and questions).

The application for presenters will include: a CV (one page), the current research project (3,500 characters max.), a presentation proposal demonstrating an interdisciplinary approach and significant theoretical investment (1,500 characters).

The application for discussants will include: a CV, the research project, and a brief cover letter. Language of communication: French preferred (passive proficiency essential), English, Spanish, Italian.

Presentations will be published in digital form on the Summer University's Hypothèses blog.

Schedule/Selection

Applications (in PDF format) must be sent before March 1, 2026 to the following address: universite17@inha.fr. The selection committee will notify successful candidates in early April 2026.

Financial support

The BNF and INHA will welcome participants and provide lunch. Applicants who do not live in Paris or the Paris region may apply for financial support for transportation and accommodation, with a maximum lump sum of €100 (regions) to €150 (abroad). Payment will be made upon presentation of invoices for expenses incurred (travel, accommodation) at the end of the Summer University and after signing off.

Students are strongly advised to also contact their university's research laboratory for additional assistance.
