Materialising the Holy. Matter, Senses, and Spiritual Experience in the Middle Ages (12th–15th century).

From 6 to 8 May 2026, the fourth international multidisciplinary conference in the “Experiencing the Sacred” series will take place within the framework of the ERC project SensArt, under the title Materialising the Holy: Matter, Senses, and Spiritual Experience in the Middle Ages (12th–15th Century), at the University of Padua.

Recent scholarship has increasingly foregrounded materiality, shifting art-historical inquiry from a primary focus on images to the physical substance of objects, now understood as active sites of meaning and devotion. In parallel, the Middle Ages witnessed a profound transformation in theories of perception: drawing on Aristotle, thinkers such as Thomas Aquinas argued that all knowledge originates in the senses, so that intellectual understanding is grounded in sensory experience rather than opposed to it. Consequently, in contrast to earlier traditions influenced by Augustine of Hippo, medieval scholars came to regard the senses as indispensable instruments of cognition and as legitimate pathways to engagement with the divine. Building on this dual reorientation toward matter and the senses, the ERC project SenSArt (2021–2026) has explored the interplay of art, material culture, and sensory experience in medieval Europe.

At this final conference of the project, international scholars from a range of disciplines – including historians, art historians, architectural historians – will examine the role of materiality within the sacred context of the Middle Ages.
