"word beginning the in the was": Sound and Permutation in the Poems of Brion Gysin.

This workshop will focus on the Permutation Poems that British-Canadian artist Brion Gysin produced from the 1950s until his death in 1984. While these poems have been variously revisited through their visual forms, this one-day conference will focus in particular on their sound versions. Bringing together art history, discrete mathematics, contemporary artistic creation and American studies, its questions will be twofold. It will seek to assess the part played by combinatorial analysis in the make-up of Gysin's "machine poems", the recitation of which has been recorded with a reel-to-reel tape recorder. This electroacoustic method will then be examined in line with Bryon Gysin's social and political stance, as a gay man struggling to find his place in a shared language.
