

Aesthetics of Solace, Politics of Care (online/Florence, 11-12 Jun 26)

Kunsthistorisches Institut in Florenz – Max-Planck-Institut (Florence, Italy), Jun
11–12, 2026

Natalie Arrowsmith

Transdisciplinary Workshop at the Kunsthistorisches Institut in Florenz – Max-Planck-Institut organized by Hana Gründler and Alejandro Nodarse Jammal and the Research Group Ethico-Aesthetics of the Visual.

“The world will look different if we move care from its current peripheral location to a place near the center of human life,” wrote Joan Tronto in Moral Boundaries (1993). Three decades later, this workshop takes Tronto’s claim as a point of departure and critical reassessment, asking how care—in its aesthetic, ethical, and political dimensions, from antiquity to the present—has made the world look different. How have individual forms of solace, including those embedded in artistic production and reception, been mobilized toward political ends? When has care, in claiming new ethical potentials, sought to distance itself from earlier aesthetic norms? And when does care of oneself (re)emerge as a form of political dissidence?

Across two days, fourteen speakers approach care and solace as historically contingent and politically fraught. Resisting purely affirmational or presentist accounts, they draw attention to the structures that mediate care: systems of governance and surveillance, regimes of labor and institutionalization, and the shaping of identity along gendered and racialized lines. Together, the speakers offer alternative genealogies of care and solace—and consider their critical futures.
