

Visiting Assistant Professor, Visual Studies of the Early Modern World, New York

New York University, Sep 1, 2027–Aug 31, 2029

Application deadline: Dec 1, 2026

Todd Porterfield, New York University

The Gallatin School of Individualized Study at New York University (NYU) invites applications for a two-year Visiting Assistant Professor in Visual Studies of the Early Modern World to commence on September 1, 2027. We are seeking a scholar of the visual who can teach undergraduate courses on the early modern world using transregional or transcultural perspectives. We will consider scholars of any part of the world. Successful candidates for this two-year position will present strong evidence of excellence in interdisciplinary teaching and research and will have the Ph.D. in hand by the start date of September 1, 2027.

The position is a two-year, non-renewable position, during which time the Visiting Assistant Professor will participate fully in the life of the school, through faculty meetings and special programming. A strong track record of innovative teaching across disciplines is required. Candidates are advised that all teaching at Gallatin is done on campus in New York City.

Founded in 1972, Gallatin is a liberal arts college of 1,600 undergraduate students and 160 graduate students located within the major research University of NYU. Its innovative B.A. and M.A. programs in individualized study encourage students to develop an integrated, interdisciplinary program of study that combines courses taken in the various schools of NYU with independent studies, internships, and Gallatin's own interdisciplinary seminars, writing courses, and arts workshops. The School emphasizes excellent teaching, top level faculty research, intensive student advising and mentoring, and a unique combination of program flexibility and academic rigor.
